

Anpuku

*Abdominal Japanese bodywork
The heart of our core of being...*

Live seminar

In Japan, touch therapy is multi-skilled and especially in the abdominal area.

Already in 1700 it was written:

"The abdomen is the source of life and therefore the source of diseases and their roots in it."

(YOSHIMATSU MUBANSAI, free translation)

Touch work on the abdomen can be a mirror to the root and foundations of the mind and a wonderful tool for in-depth processes ancient writings and new studies talk about it.

But above all the clinic and what I have encountered in the last two decades (and still counting.) proves it more than all.

The Anma and the Anpuku are traditional bodywork healing arts, originating in traditional Chinese medicine, some 5,000 years ago. Their current format was developed in Japan about 500 years ago and has been given separate definitions (Anma and Anpuku) by master Goto and Ota sensei.

The Anma (An = pressing, ma = rubbing) is known in the world as the mother of touch therapy, from which Shiatsu, Tuina and more developed in later stages.*

Anpuku is a miraculous healing art that is part of the key building blocks in Japanese touch medicine. Evidence for the use of touch therapy and abdominal diagnosis in Japan has existed for over a thousand years.*

Most of the information was passed on by heart between the masters and family members. The legendary Ota Sensei published an interesting handful of writings and called it "Anpuku zukai" (Anpuku, Illustration for the Masses).

The book "Anma Tabiki" was written in 1799 And published in 1835 documents some of the methods of diagnosis and treatment using the abdomen. It was published during the Edo period in Japan about 400 years ago.

Anpuku Zukai was written by Ota sensei, published in the Edo period, first in 1827 and a later edition in 1887, is the book we are going to focus on the workshop and more.*
